1. 6 th European Public Health Conference – Brussels 13-16 November 2013

Health in Europe: are we there yet?
*Learning from the past,
building the future*

The full programme of Brussels 2013 is now available. For more information:
www.eupha.org/Brussels2013.

Call for presenting your publication

During the conference, on Friday 15 November at lunch time, EUPHA is organizing a 60 minute session where the most recent and interesting publications on public health are presented in very short, innovative and creative speeches. Did you or your institute recently publish a ground-breaking book? Are you finalizing a trendsetting report? Do you have cutting-edge results? Then this will be the session to present these!

If you are interested in participating, please send your short summary (200 words) by 1 September to: office@eupha.org. A small expert committee will examine all entries and make a final selection.

Call for chairs – still a couple of days left

For Brussels 2013, we are planning to organise the parallel programme sessions chaired by two people: an experienced chair combined with a participant who is interested in learning the skills to chair.

- Are you an experienced chair, planning to attend the conference and interested in chairing one of the sessions?
- Are you an early career professional, planning to attend the conference and interested in chairing one of the sessions?

Then you can contact us at office@eupha.org by 31 July 2013 and send us your preferred topics. We will do our best to accommodate you.

Malta 2012: plenary webcasts now available

The plenary sessions of the Malta 2012 conference are now available on the EPHconference channel of youtube via:

Journalists writing on health are invited to submit their articles published between 01/08/2012 and 30/09/2013 via the website http://ec.europa.eu/health-eu/journalist_prize/. The submission deadline is on 30/09/2013. To see all the rules please go to the website.

4. Interesting News

EuroSafe newsletter now available

The July 2013 issue of the quarterly EuroSafe Alert Newsletter offers information on a wide range of initiatives and actions relevant for injury prevention. As to injury surveillance, this issue puts work of our colleagues in Germany and Iceland into the spotlight.

We are also happy to announce that on 13 November, EuroSafe and the Injury Section of the European Public Health Association (EUPHA) will jointly organise a one day seminar on the use of injury data for driving health and consumer policies and actions at local and national". This seminar will be held in Brussels as pre-conference to the 6th European Public Health Conference (14-16 November, also in Brussels). Online registration

HEAL Press release

WHO report underlines need for stronger EU action on air pollution, says HEAL

A scientific review on air pollution conducted by the World Health Organization (WHO) shows that the EU needs to step up efforts to improve air quality, according to the Health and Environment Alliance (HEAL).

WHO's "Review of evidence on health aspects of air pollution" (REVIHAAP) project (1) provides new and more extensive evidence of harm to health in adults and children, including on prenatal development. The long-term effects on healthy adults are found to be underestimated, and diabetes has been added to the existing list of respiratory and heart disease effects in adults. The review shows additional evidence long-term impact of exposure to air pollution on respiratory health, such as asthma. Twice as many people suffer from asthma today compared to thirty years ago. For children, the report also highlights new and worrying impacts on neurodevelopment and cognitive function, and adverse effects in birth outcomes of babies born to exposed mothers.

The scientists also say that the effects of very hot periods during the summer - associated with climate change in Europe - will make the effects of air pollution worse.

The assessment, carried out by 60 leading international scientists in the field, forms part of the discussions on future EU measures in the EU Year of Air 2013. The findings prompted the scientists to recommend a review of existing WHO guidelines. They also say that the "newfound health effects call for stronger EU air policies", and that EU ambient air quality standards should be revised.

The findings come at an important moment. This autumn will see the launch of proposals on how to improve air quality all over Europe. HEAL calls on the EU Commission, but especially EU member states to increase their political commitment to tackling air pollution, which causes more premature death in Europe than road accidents. (2)

The project reviewed new studies on how particulate matter, ozone, nitrogen dioxide, sulphur dioxide and other pollutants harm our health. On particulate matter (PM) it showed more evidence on both short and long-term effects and greater damage at lower levels.

Studies on nitrogen dioxide (NO₂) also produced new evidence of long-term effects, including harm to health at levels below existing EU limit values. It found that even for healthy and mildly asthmatic people there were small effects on inflammation and airway responsiveness. Such changes would not be detected by clinical doctors but the consequences for the entire population, including people with existing respiratory and heart problems, would be significant.

The research on ozone provided more evidence on short and long-term effects, and suggested effects on cognitive development in children, reproductive health and pre-term births. Over 60 health and environmental groups recently launched their three priorities for the review of EU air policies. These are: strong emissions reductions across the board in the National Emissions Ceilings Directive; achieving emission reductions in all sectors, also those that are currently unregulated; and a strengthening and further enforcement of the EU ambient air quality standards (3).

EPHA 4th Annual Conference, 4-5 September 2013, Brussels

In an official event of the Lithuanian Presidency of the Council of the European Union, the European Public Health Alliance (EPHA) will celebrate, on 4 and 5 September 2013, 20 years of helping shape Europe's public health in a conference entitled Brave New World: Inclusive Growth and Well-Being or Vested Interests and Lost Generations?

EPHA is using this milestone as an opportunity to look at how we can foster an EU that is coherent in its decisions, in terms of fostering the health and well-being of people living in Europe.

Some of the speakers include: Tonio Borg, European Commissioner for Health and Consumer Policy (DG SANCO); Paola Testori Coggi, Director-General for DG SANCO; Vytenis Povilas Andriukaitis, Lithuanian Minister of Health; ; Zsuzsanna Jakab, WHO Regional Director for Europe; Yves Leterme, Deputy Secretary General of the Organisation of Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD); and Robert Madelin, Director-General for DG Communications Networks, Content and Technology.

Health literacy. The solid facts

(Edited by Ilona Kickbusch, Jürgen M. Pelikan, Franklin Apfel and Agis D. Tsouros)

As societies grow more complex and people are increasingly bombarded with health information and misinformation, health literacy becomes essential. People with strong health literacy skills enjoy better health and well-being, while those with weaker skills tend to engage in riskier behaviour and have poorer health. With evidence from the recent European Health Literacy Survey, this report identifies practical and effective ways public health and other sector authorities and advocates can strengthen health literacy in a variety of settings, including educational settings, workplaces, marketplaces, health systems, new and traditional media and political arenas. The report can be used as a tool for spreading awareness, stimulating debate and research and, above all, for informing policy development and action.
