The European Public Health Association (EUPHA) asked its members what they think are the most important priorities in public health in the coming 5 years. According to them, universal health is a high priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

The results presented hereafter summarise the respondents’ answers. Many questions were posed as free text, if not so indicated in the table footnotes. Answers were collected from April 1 to May 3, 2021. Professionals responded in their individual capacity.

Profile of the respondents

A total of 248 people gave good responses on the questionnaire.

Female 236
Male 12

Results 2021 20 years
Older people 50 years

Profile

The questionnaire consisted of 16 questions, all of which were presented as free text. If not so indicated in the table footnotes, answers were collected from April 1 to May 3, 2021. Professionals responded in their individual capacity.

Access to care was one of the key themes in the world health report. It is internationally considered a priority in public health. A priority for all, regardless of age and sex, as well as for both health and social care.

Health promotion, including promotion of disease avoidance and recovery of healthy lifestyles, is also a priority for all age groups, and for males and females alike.

Non-communicable diseases (NCDs) including cardiovascular diseases and diabetes are listed as a priority for both sexes and for adults and the oldest age group. Several types of cancer are specified: breast, cervical, prostate, colon and lung cancer.

As can be seen in the wordcloud, the most frequently listed public health priority is mental health care. A priority for all, regardless of age and sex, as well as for both health and social care.

In the coming 5 years, EUPHA will:

- advocate on behalf of the public health community and support our members on national and European agendas and support for discussion and networking on public health issues.
- communicate the evidence-based to support action on these priorities through our peer-review in their thematic networks and our conference publications.
- facilitate, activate and disseminate strong evidence-based voices from the public health community and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals. EUPHA contributes to the preservation and improvement of public health in the European region through capacity and knowledge building. We are committed to creating a more inclusive Europe, narrowing all health inequalities among Europeans, by activate a strong voice of the public health network by enhancing visibility of the evidence and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals. EUPHA contributes to the preservation and improvement of public health in the European region through capacity and knowledge building. We are committed to creating a more inclusive Europe, narrowing all health inequalities among Europeans, by activate a strong voice of the public health network by enhancing visibility of the evidence and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals.

The European Public Health Association (EUPHA) asked its members what they think are the most important priorities in public health in the coming 5 years. According to them, universal health is a high priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

Mental health, abuse

Europe is a top priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

Adolescents and older people

Inequalities, including social inequalities.

EUPHA Governing Board members and WHO/Europe country offices where EUPHA does not have members where people gave input with good representation.

Top priorities for specific groups

The use of alcohol, tobacco, and substances is a top priority across all groups and for both sexes.

Health promotion, including promotion of disease avoidance and recovery of healthy lifestyles, is also a priority for all age groups, and for males and females alike.

Non-communicable diseases (NCDs) including cardiovascular diseases and diabetes are listed as a priority for both sexes and for adults and the oldest age group. Several types of cancer are specified: breast, cervical, prostate, colon and lung cancer.

As can be seen in the wordcloud, the most frequently listed public health priority is mental health care. A priority for all, regardless of age and sex, as well as for both health and social care.

In the coming 5 years, EUPHA will:

- advocate on behalf of the public health community and support our members on national and European agendas and support for discussion and networking on public health issues.
- communicate the evidence-based to support action on these priorities through our peer-review in their thematic networks and our conference publications.
- facilitate, activate and disseminate strong evidence-based voices from the public health community and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals. EUPHA contributes to the preservation and improvement of public health in the European region through capacity and knowledge building. We are committed to creating a more inclusive Europe, narrowing all health inequalities among Europeans, by activate a strong voice of the public health network by enhancing visibility of the evidence and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals.

The European Public Health Association (EUPHA) asked its members what they think are the most important priorities in public health in the coming 5 years. According to them, universal health is a high priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

Mental health, abuse

Europe is a top priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

Adolescents and older people

Inequalities, including social inequalities.

EUPHA Governing Board members and WHO/Europe country offices where EUPHA does not have members where people gave input with good representation.

Top priorities for specific groups

The use of alcohol, tobacco, and substances is a top priority across all groups and for both sexes.

Health promotion, including promotion of disease avoidance and recovery of healthy lifestyles, is also a priority for all age groups, and for males and females alike.

Non-communicable diseases (NCDs) including cardiovascular diseases and diabetes are listed as a priority for both sexes and for adults and the oldest age group. Several types of cancer are specified: breast, cervical, prostate, colon and lung cancer.

As can be seen in the wordcloud, the most frequently listed public health priority is mental health care. A priority for all, regardless of age and sex, as well as for both health and social care.

In the coming 5 years, EUPHA will:

- advocate on behalf of the public health community and support our members on national and European agendas and support for discussion and networking on public health issues.
- communicate the evidence-based to support action on these priorities through our peer-review in their thematic networks and our conference publications.
- facilitate, activate and disseminate strong evidence-based voices from the public health community and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals. EUPHA contributes to the preservation and improvement of public health in the European region through capacity and knowledge building. We are committed to creating a more inclusive Europe, narrowing all health inequalities among Europeans, by activate a strong voice of the public health network by enhancing visibility of the evidence and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals.

The European Public Health Association (EUPHA) asked its members what they think are the most important priorities in public health in the coming 5 years. According to them, universal health is a high priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

Mental health, abuse

Europe is a top priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

Adolescents and older people

Inequalities, including social inequalities.

EUPHA Governing Board members and WHO/Europe country offices where EUPHA does not have members where people gave input with good representation.

Top priorities for specific groups

The use of alcohol, tobacco, and substances is a top priority across all groups and for both sexes.

Health promotion, including promotion of disease avoidance and recovery of healthy lifestyles, is also a priority for all age groups, and for males and females alike.

Non-communicable diseases (NCDs) including cardiovascular diseases and diabetes are listed as a priority for both sexes and for adults and the oldest age group. Several types of cancer are specified: breast, cervical, prostate, colon and lung cancer.

As can be seen in the wordcloud, the most frequently listed public health priority is mental health care. A priority for all, regardless of age and sex, as well as for both health and social care.

In the coming 5 years, EUPHA will:

- advocate on behalf of the public health community and support our members on national and European agendas and support for discussion and networking on public health issues.
- communicate the evidence-based to support action on these priorities through our peer-review in their thematic networks and our conference publications.
- facilitate, activate and disseminate strong evidence-based voices from the public health community and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals. EUPHA contributes to the preservation and improvement of public health in the European region through capacity and knowledge building. We are committed to creating a more inclusive Europe, narrowing all health inequalities among Europeans, by activate a strong voice of the public health network by enhancing visibility of the evidence and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals.

The European Public Health Association (EUPHA) asked its members what they think are the most important priorities in public health in the coming 5 years. According to them, universal health is a high priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

Mental health, abuse

Europe is a top priority in European public health. In addition, Inequality is key as it underlies many chronic conditions that are deemed important priorities, such as cancer.

Adolescents and older people

Inequalities, including social inequalities.

EUPHA Governing Board members and WHO/Europe country offices where EUPHA does not have members where people gave input with good representation.

Top priorities for specific groups

The use of alcohol, tobacco, and substances is a top priority across all groups and for both sexes.

Health promotion, including promotion of disease avoidance and recovery of healthy lifestyles, is also a priority for all age groups, and for males and females alike.

Non-communicable diseases (NCDs) including cardiovascular diseases and diabetes are listed as a priority for both sexes and for adults and the oldest age group. Several types of cancer are specified: breast, cervical, prostate, colon and lung cancer.

As can be seen in the wordcloud, the most frequently listed public health priority is mental health care. A priority for all, regardless of age and sex, as well as for both health and social care.

In the coming 5 years, EUPHA will:

- advocate on behalf of the public health community and support our members on national and European agendas and support for discussion and networking on public health issues.
- communicate the evidence-based to support action on these priorities through our peer-review in their thematic networks and our conference publications.
- facilitate, activate and disseminate strong evidence-based voices from the public health community and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals. EUPHA contributes to the preservation and improvement of public health in the European region through capacity and knowledge building. We are committed to creating a more inclusive Europe, narrowing all health inequalities among Europeans, by activate a strong voice of the public health network by enhancing visibility of the evidence and by strengthening the capacity of public health professionals.