Enhancing pathways for vaccine assessments and national decision-making – a driver of resilient health systems

Organised by VaccinesEurope

The COVID-19 pandemic has dramatically highlighted the crucial role that vaccines play in ensuring good population health, health system resilience, and societal well-being. As Europe begins to look beyond the pandemic, there is an opportunity to reflect on the future needs of the vaccine ecosystem as a driver of health system resilience and sustainability. A key area for attention and policy action concerns the country-specific pathways through which vaccines are assessed and decisions made on their inclusion in National Immunisation Programmes (NIPs). This lunch symposium will bring together key stakeholders from across Europe's immunisation ecosystem to consider the actions that are needed to enhance national vaccine pathways.

More lunch symposiums will be announced shortly on our website.
