

EUROPEAN PUBLIC HEALTH WEEK

Dear reader,

Today we started the morning with a deep dive into 'Vaccines as key prevention strategy'. Our partner European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control (ECDC) has done an incredible job in inviting an interesting group of speakers. Piotr Kramarz (ECDC) and Maria Gançzak (EUPHA Infectious diseases control section) co-hosted the event remarkably. After their introduction David Bloom (Harvard School of Public Health) took the virtual floor with a video. He explained why there's an underspending on public health. Mark Jit (London School of Tropical Hygiene and Medicine) followed this up, talking about the broad impact of vaccines. Michele Cecchini (OECD) added to this by explaining the contribution of vaccines on for example the antimicrobial resistance. Finally, Jonas Sivelä (Finnish Institute for Health and Welfare) taught us about the tailored implementation strategies Finland has used for strengthening vaccination acceptance.

It was a truly interesting webinar and captivating start of the day! You can watch it here.

“Some vaccines are among the most cost-effective public health interventions ever developed.”

Mark Jit, London School of Tropical Hygiene and Medicine

Other events today

Of course there were a lot more events today. Let us give you a little glimpse:

- Our Health Technology Assessment section hosted an event to discuss vaccines efficacy and safety.
- This whole week there's a lot of activities at the Medical University of Pleven, today specifically on vaccines. Watch their video
- Our member the French Society of Public health organised a webinar on social and environmental health inequalities.
- Podcast: Alastair Leyland and Anna Pearce speak to Vittal Katikireddi from the SPHSU about his work examining waning of the AstraZeneca vaccine.
- Speakers shared their experiences establishing relationships with the community and discuss promising approaches to address vaccine equity & accessibility during the webinar of River EU.
- Interesting fact shared by the Pirbright Institute: "Last year a £40m Animal Vaccine Centre was announced at the Institute to accelerate the delivery of vaccines for livestock diseases. Protecting animal health also protects human health."
- The University of Vienna shared insights on the connection between health crises and society.
